Research Methodology – Research Process

Research Methodology – Global Breast Pump Market

- The market for breast pump was calculated by building a country-wise statistical model based on various factors such as the number of birth per year, rate of breastfeeding, and penetration of breast pump among the breastfeeding population. Furthermore, the number of the breastfeeding population opting for hospital grade and consumer grade breast pump and the average selling price of the breast pump was also considered in the statistical model to calculate the breast pump market.
- The summation of revenues and segmental revenues of major market players also led to an estimated market size in 2025. Moreover, an analysis of COVID-19 impact on the market was done through these revenue and segmental revenues of market players.
- Various sources such as the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), Investor Presentation, Annual Report, Company Website, and research articles were referred while estimating the global breast pump market.

- The data related to the size of the global women health devices market for different years of the study period were collected and analyzed. Then the share of the breast pump market was identified and calculated.
- Various sources, such as investor presentations and annual reports of top companies operating in the market, were referred to while estimating the breast pump market

- Supply Side Interviews: Discussions with key companies operating in the market to gather insights on the market size, growth rate, distribution of the market, market dynamics, and impact of COVID-19 on the market
- Demand Side Interviews: Discussion with various lactation consultants to analyse usage patterns of the hospital grade and consumer grade breast pumps, and collected insights on impact of COVID-19 on the market.
